The Stories of Ranch and Farm Women in the Modern American West

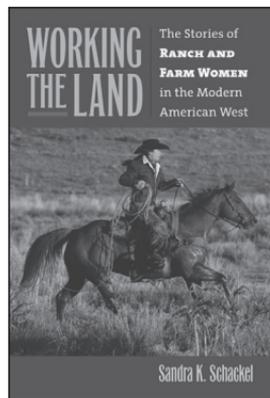

Sandra K. Schackel

"An impressive book that tells a multifaceted story of economic survival in troubled times, of strong women wrangling animals and running mowers, and also doing all of the other things necessary to run a farm or ranch."

—Pamela Riney-Kehrberg, author of Childhood on the Farm: Work, Play, and Coming of Age in the Midwest

"Skillfully weaves together personal stories and recent scholarship to show how contemporary farm and ranch women of the Mountain West find value and stability in their lives."—Susan H. Armitage, coeditor of The Women's West

184 pages, 27 photographs, Cloth $24.95

Roi Ottley's World War II

The Lost Diary of an African American Journalist

Edited with an introduction by Mark A. Huddle

"If you think you know the American experience of World War II, just try looking at the European theater through the eyes of African American war correspondent Roi Ottley. I found fascinating new stuff on page after page."—James Tobin, author of Ernie Pyle's War

"Ottley's lively and original writings provide a vivid and heartfelt portrait of African American soldiers as they struggled to bring democracy to Europe and America during the World War II era. . . . An important contribution to our understanding of African American history and American race relations."—Albert S. Broussard, author of African-American Odyssey: The Stewarts, 1853–1963
