

ANNOUNCING A SPECIAL ISSUE . . .

devoted to briefing specialists in American Studies on the current state of research in anthropological studies of the American Indian.

The Editor, as you perhaps know, conceives of the Midcontinent American Studies Journal as a place in which "civilizationers" can keep in touch with new tendencies in the scholarship in specialties other than their own: one can hardly reach sound interdisciplinary conclusions if one is not in contact with good new work in several of the related disciplines. This special number is designed as a primer of current live issues in the field of American Indian Studies. It will be edited jointly by Stuart Levine and Nancy Oestreich Lurie; Professor Lurie is serving as a special guest editor for this one issue.

The articles are designed for non-anthropologists and are fully self-explanatory.

A leading anthropologist says of the project, "This will, of course, be very good for you in history, literature, political science and so forth, but it will be good for us as anthropologists as well, for it will force us to take a long look at our work, to see where we are going, to see what our new research implies."

Another wrote, "If you are as badly misinformed about anthropology as I am about literature, you are probably repenting generalizations that looked good in graduate school, but won't hold up today. For both of us this issue should be an important document."

The issue will be published some time in 1965 as one of the Journal's regular numbers. To order extra copies, send a check for $1.25 to Professor Jerzy Hauptmann at our business office, Park College, Parkville, Missouri. Please do NOT send checks to the editorial office in Lawrence.
