The Dialogist

a journal of dialogue in theory and practice
King's College, Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania

If you believe:

1. that dialogue methods—non-authoritarian modes of interaction and study—proposed by such men as Carl Rogers, Pope Paul VI, Martin Buber, and Adam Schaff can lead to important increases in human understanding;
2. that interdisciplinary studies are a necessity and not a frill if we are to revitalize our educational order;
3. that not enough attention is being given to dialogue methods and interdisciplinary studies as they bear upon teaching, learning, social work, social research, counseling, medicine, psychiatry, religion and a host of other human activities;

then you may want to subscribe to THE DIALOGIST.

The Spring 1970 issue (Vol. II, No. 1) will carry the following articles:

"Dialogue and the Educational Order"

Clement Jedrzejewski, St. Francis College

"Communication, Mitsein, Dialogue, Communion, Etc."

David R. Cheney, University of Miami

"Dialogue Methods and the Teaching of History"

Stuart Horn & Roger Balt, Hunter College

"Communication and the Concept of Education"

William E. Doll, Jr., The Johns Hopkins University

"Political Science and Economics: The Prospects for Interdisciplinary Research"

I. Stephen Ziony, City College of New York

Also reviews of new and old books relating to interdisciplinary studies and dialogue.

And Response: A Reader/Writer Dialogue—extended comment from readers and replies from writers on questions of dialogue in theory and practice.

The Dialogist* appears three (3) times per year in Spring, Summer, and Fall;
Subscriptions are six dollars ($6) per year.
