

Notes on Contributors

Robert E. Schofield is Professor of History of Technology and Science, Iowa State University. His interests are Eighteenth Century Natural Philosophy, Joseph Priestley, and the Interaction of Science and the Humanities. His books include The Lunar Society of Birmingham: A Social History of Provincial Science and Technology in 18th Century England (1963), Mechanism and Materialism: British National Philosophy in An Age of Reason (1970) and (with D. G. C. Allan) Stephen Hales: Scientist-Philanthropist (1980).

Gail Fowler Mohanty is Executive Director and Curator at the Charles River Museum of Industry and Adjunct Assistant Professor in the American and New England Studies Program at Boston University. She is currently involved in research on commercial hand-loom weaving prior to 1790, and is preparing her dissertation for publication in book form under the provisional title "The Impact of Technological Change on Hand-loom Weavers, 1780-1840."

Nancy M. Theriot is Assistant Professor of History, University of Louisville. Her most recent publications are: "Psychosomatic Illness in History: The 'Green Sickness' Among Nineteenth-Century Adolescent Girls," Journal of Psychohistory 15 (1989), 461-480; and The Biosocial Construction of Femininity: Mothers and Daughters in Nineteenth-Century America (Westport, Connecticut, 1988). She is currently completing research for a book manuscript on the medical discourse on female insanity in the nineteenth century.

continued on page 154

(continued from page 4)

Alan I Marcus is Professor of History and Director of the Center for Historical Studies of Technology and Science at Iowa State University. He is the author of Agricultural Science and the Quest for Legitimacy: Farmers, Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations, 1870-1890 (1985); Plague of Strangers: City and Nation and the Provision of Municipal Social Services, Cincinnati, 1819-1870 (forthcoming); and co-author (with Howard P. Segal) of Technology in America: A Brief History (1989). He is presently completing a booklength manuscript tentatively entitled "Cancer in Beef: DES, Scientists and the Rise of Modern Food Regulation in America."

Zane L. Miller is the author of books and articles on American urban history, including Boss Cox's Cincinnati: Physician to the West (with Henry D. Shapiro); Suburb; The Urbanization of Modern America (with Patricia Mooney Melvin); The Planning Partnership (with Thomas Jenkins); and American Urbanism (with Howard Gillette, Jr.). He is Professor of History and Co-Director, Center for Neighborhood and Community Studies, University of Cincinnati; co-editor of the Urban Life and Urban Landscape Series, Ohio State University Press (with Henry D. Shapiro) and of the Greater Cincinnati Bicentennial History Series, University of Illinois Press (with Gene D. Lewis).

Patricia Spain Ward, Campus Historian at The University of Illinois at Chicago, is the author of a comparative study of Richard Clarke Cabot and Hugh Cabot; a historian of the Krebiozen cancer controversy; a study of the impact of Abraham Flexner's survey of medical schools on the medical profession in Illinois; and a history of women in pharmacy. Her biography of Simon Baruch (1840-1921), a medical reformer and founder of physical medicine, is forthcoming. She is currently writing histories of The University of Illinois at Chicago College of Medicine and The University of Illinois at Chicago.