

Notes on Contributors

Elaine Prostack Berland is the 1996-1997 president of MAASA. She received her Ph.D. in American Studies from the University of Kansas. She is the Associate Dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences at Washington University.

Michael D. Clark is Professor of History at the University of New Orleans and the author of books and articles on intellectual history. His most recent work, which includes articles in the Journal of American Studies on the social theories of Ralph Adams Cram and on Virginia historians and the cavalier legend, explores the idea and uses of tradition in American thought of the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.

Doris Friedensohn is Professor of Women's Studies and American Studies at Jersey City State College. She chairs the Women's Committee of the American Studies Association. She contributed, "Towards a Post-Imperial, Transnational American Studies: Notes of a Frequent Flier" to the special American Studies issue, "American Studies: From Culture Concept to Cultural Studies?" (Summer, 1997)

Thomas Hallock received a Ph.D. in English from New York University in 1995. He is currently at work on a book, "From the Fallen Tree: Frontier Narratives, Environmental Politics and the Roots of a National Literature." This study addresses nature writing from the mid-eighteenth century to the early national period. He is Assistant Professor at Valdosta State University.

Joseph Moreau is a former journalist and now a graduate student in the Program in American Culture at the University of Michigan. His dissertation explores the construction of ideas of nation in American history textbooks published for secondary schools between 1876 and 1930. He wrote an early draft of this article for a history seminar led by Richard Candida Smith.

(continued on p. 163)

Notes on Contributors

(continued from p. 4)

Robyn Muncy is Associate Professor of History at the University of Maryland, College Park. She is author of Creating a Female Dominion in American Reform, 1890-1935 (Oxford, 1991) and is co-editing with Sonya Michel Engendering America, 1865-present, a documentary history of gender for classroom use.

Stephen J. Stein is Chancellors' Professor and Chair in the Department of Religious Studies at Indiana University, Bloomington. He is Adjunct Professor in the Department of History and the American Studies Program. He is the author of The Shaker Experience in America (Yale University Press, 1992), editor of The Writings of Jonathan Edwards: Text, Context, Interpretation (Indiana University Press, 1996), and also editor of the forthcoming volume entitled Biblical Writings: "Notes on Scripture" in The Works of Jonathan Edwards (Yale University Press). Stein served as Director of the American Studies Program at Indiana University from 1981-1984.