Proust et le texte producteur

Edited by John Erickson & Irène Pagès

Texts by Serge Doubrovsky, Michael Finn, Enid Marantz, Jean Milly, Marcel Muller, Michel Raimond, Jean Ricardou, Joan Rosasco, Stéphane Sarkany & Emily Zants

These essays by ten distinguished critics explore in the work of Marcel Proust the function if not to say the nature of the text in constant transformation. They analyse the phenomenon of intertextuality: the work as the “absorption and transformation of a multiplicity of other texts” (Kristeva), as well as the interaction of the text with itself, the reverberation between theme and organization, object and écriture, physical landscape and moral-psychic landscape. The Proustian text spills over, effects transmutation at the heart of writing and through writing. More than any other writing, that of Proust lends itself to this débordement and metamorphosis, such that it becomes the model of a texte producteur.
