Call for Sites IALL '01 and Beyond

While IALL '99 at the University of Maryland is in the planning stages, it is time to start thinking about the locations for IALL 2001 and IALL 2003.

If you are interested in hosting an IALL conference at your institution, please follow the Guidelines below. Any questions you have may be directed to Chris Higgins (see his address and other information, above).

Your proposal should be no more than 10 pages in length.

1) Please answer the following questions:

-Why would you like to host an IALL Conference at your institution?

-Why do you think your institution would be a good location for an IALL Conference?

-What would be the best/desired dates to hold an IALL Conference?

2) Give a general description of your institution, its facilities, lecture halls, computer labs, seminar rooms.

3) Indicate what type of technical support your campus can provide for troubleshooting and setting up computer and audiovisual equipment.

4) Describe your local support for conference planning: conference services, staff, etc.

5) Indicate what type of experience you have had in planning conferences, symposia, colloquia, or meetings elsewhere.

6) Describe lodging options for the conference (please anticipate approximately 500 participants, some with spouses and families).

7) Describe transportation options long-distance (air, rail) and within the city itself (public transportation, taxi service, etc.).

8) Summarize local attractions, daytime, and evening entertainment, restaurants, cafes, and other points of interest which would be attractive to conference participants and their families.

Email your proposal to Chris Higgins at chiggins@deans.umd.edu. ♦
