

KU First fund-raising campaign exceeds expectations

By Charles Higginson, program associate

It started ambitiously, proceeded confidently and ended more successfully than anyone could have anticipated.

KU First: Invest in Excellence – the largest fund-raising campaign in the history of the University of Kansas – concluded at the end of December. Having hit the original $500 million goal more than a year early, organizers at the KU Endowment Association set a new goal of $600 million in December of 2003, and reached it with room to spare. The final total raised was $653 million.

In similar fashion, the School of Journalism reached its original goal of $5 million, then set and met a new mark of $6 million. Gifts and pledges contributed on the School's behalf will provide support for scholarships, equipment, internships, professorships, graduate fellowships and more for years to come.

Between July 1, 1998, and Dec. 31, 2004, more than 100 corporate donors joined more than 2,800 individual contributors in support of the School. Many made more than one contribution during the campaign. All donors are listed in the KU First Roll of Honor distributed with this issue of J-Links.

The success of KU First is impressive, especially considering the size of its goals and its somewhat inauspicious start. Although the campaign's "quiet phase" began in July 1998, the active phase was launched publicly just a few days before the attacks of Sept. 11, 2001.

Letter from the Dean

One of my favorite roles as dean is thanking people on behalf of the J-School.

This issue of J-Links is a tribute to the many friends, alumni, faculty members and others who have helped us with their gifts. We have an impressive list of donors who contributed to the School's KU First Campaign. We could not have done this without the leadership of the Campaign committee appointed by former dean Jimmy Gentry. This group of dedicated volunteers was led by Mal Applegate (1959 journalism grad). Mal has had many successes in his journalism career and he brought that same sense of hard work, creativity and dedication to this campaign. Thanks, Mal!

Just as impressive are the stories of why people contribute to the School. You'll read some of those stories in the supplement to this issue. As I've come to know many of our alumni and donors, I am inspired by their high regard and memories of the J-School. They look back on their time here with gratitude for the skills, knowledge – and yes, occasional fear – that faculty members instilled in them.

It was very special to hear Jerry Seib, this year's William Allen White citation award recipient, recall his J-School days with so much admiration and gratitude for his teachers and mentors. You will read more memories from alumni throughout this issue.

Another one of my favorite roles as dean is talking with the many recruiters who visit the J-School. Many of them are alumni, but all of them have some connection with KU and the J-School. Recruiters tell me how our students are doing – both the ones they are interviewing here and the ones now working for their companies. I ask questions about the various industries they represent – not just about hiring plans, but about the future of their companies and what they think we should be doing to prepare students for careers. Our Career Fair in early March drew more than 175 students who talked with recruiters from an impressive list of 23 companies.

We have had an impressive list of visitors this year. Last fall, 300 people joined us on Kansas Editor's Day to hear former AP political reporter Walter Mears. Also in fall, Deric Gilliard, author, activist and public affairs director at the U.S. Dept. of Health & Human Services, Office of Secretary-Region IV, spent three days here talking with students. We had a great turn-out for the William Allen White dinner, meetings and presentation. And, we're making sure our visitors spend a lot of time in classes and meeting with students and faculty. One of those visitors, 2004 Pulitzer Prize winner Kevin Helliker, even got introduced at half time during a basketball game! Our goal is as much visibility as possible for all our guests.

Also among recent visitors were representatives of ACEJMC, the journalism accreditation council. We very much appreciated their time and comments when they spent three days here evaluating the strengths and weaknesses of the School. The team will recommend full reaccreditation when the council meets next month in Chicago. You'll read more about their review and recommendations in the next issue of J-Links.

So, THANK YOU!

Much of the eventual success on the School's behalf is due to the efforts of the Journalism Campaign Committee for KU First. These eight individuals gave financial gifts as well as their commitment to raise money for the School. They worked closely with KU Endowment and with deans Jimmy Gentry and Ann Brill.

Campaign Committee members were: Malcolm W. Applegate, committee chair (Journalism '59, former president and general manager, The Indianapolis Star); Danforth W. Austin (Journalism '68, chairman and CEO, Ottaway Newspapers, Inc.); Richard C. Clarkson (Journalism '55, owner, Rich Clarkson and Associates, Denver); Ralph D. Gage Jr. (Journalism '64, chief operating officer, The World Company); Larry Kanter (Communications '74, MBA '83, news anchor, 1010 WINS Radio, New York); Dana A. Leibengood (Journalism '55, MS Journalism '69, retired Journalism School administrator); Shelly J. London (Journalism '74, MBA '81, vice president-communications, American Standard Companies); and Terry K. Shockley (MS Journalism '66, president, Shockley Group).

The campaign may be over, but you still can put "KU Journalism First." For information about ways you can support the J-School, please contact Patrick Mikesic, development director at the KU Endowment Association, at (785) 832-7461 or pmikesic@kuendowment.org.

KU Endowment is an independent non-profit organization serving as the official fund-raising and fund-management organization for the University of Kansas. Founded in 1891, KU Endowment is the first foundation of its kind at a U.S. public university and one of the largest. □

Stauffer-Flint Hall gets a mini facelift

After

The wood floors on the first and second floors of Stauffer-Flint were refinished over the holiday break. They had dulled over the years and were badly in need of repair. The ceiling tiles on the first and second floors also were replaced. To further beautify the J-School, a distinguished alumni display case and photography display on the second floor were added. Julie Jacobson's photos are currently on display. She is a 1992 graduate and an Associated Press photographer (see page 9 for her profile). □

A Jayhawk Journalist goes to Washington

By Jennifer Byrd, graduate student

I've become a C-SPAN addict. I used to watch the public affairs network sporadically, but after spending last fall interning at the National Journal's CongressDaily in Washington, D.C., the programming means more now.

I see reporters I met asking questions during the televised briefings. I see rooms in the Capitol and nearby office buildings where I've been. I laugh when I see a briefing in the House electronic media gallery because I know the title of one of the fake books behind the podium has something to do with treating gastrointestinal diseases.

And, most important, I know that what is shown on the network is both real and important. Before, the issues the federal government dealt with seemed distant. Now, I feel obligated to pay much closer attention.

I was selected, along with 13 other students from various universities, to spend a semester interning at a news bureau and attending seminars to learn about politics.

The program is sponsored by the Washington Center for Politics and Journalism, an organization run by Terry Michael, a former press secretary for Sen. Paul Simon and the Democratic National Committee. Michael, also a former journalist, established the program in 1988 to improve young reporters' knowledge of politics by having them learn from actual political insiders, not books. A dozen students from KU have participated in the program through the years. Graduate student Deron Lee is there this semester.

We met twice a week for an hour and a half for the seminars. Some of our speakers included Walter Mears, formerly of The Associated Press; Jonathan Rauch of the National Journal; former Rep. Bill Frenzel, R-Minn.; Jim Pinkerton, Newsday columnist and Fox News commentator; Robert Samuelson, a columnist for the Washington Post and Newsweek; and Tom Rosentiel, director of the Project for Excellence in Journalism and former Los Angeles Times media critic.

Brock Meeks, the chief Washington correspondent for MSNBC, took us on a tour of the NBC studios in suburban Washington. This is the home of the storied "Studio A," where Nixon debated Kennedy, where "The Muppets" was first filmed and where "Meet the Press" is taped.

We went to the offices of the Federal Election Commission, the National Republican Congressional Committee, the Democratic National Committee and the CATO Institute.

For my internship at CongressDaily, I went to the Capitol once or twice a week to cover an event or to deliver papers to reporters. On my first day in the Capitol, I passed by Sen. Joe Lieberman, D-Conn., and Sen. Olympia Snowe, R-Maine, and rode the trolley from the Capitol to the Senate Hart Office Building with Sen. Elizabeth Dole, R-N.C.

I went to the National Press Club and listened to Jim Lehrer of PBS speak about the controversy surrounding the CBS story about President Bush's National Guard service. I stayed up all night on Election Night, watching returns come in. I went to the White House and met legendary Hearst columnist Helen Thomas and President Bush's press secretary Scott McClellan.

Because of the program, I had the opportunity to have lunch with the incoming president of the National Press Club, Rick Dunham of Business Week. With the help of Lawrence Journal-World senior editor Bill Snead, formerly the photography editor at The Washington Post, I had lunch with Karlyn Barker, a reporter for the newspaper, and went on a tour of the newsroom.

For a political and journalism junkie like me, the semester was a dream experience. □

The Supreme Court at sunset, by Jennifer Byrd

A conversation with Gerald F. Seib, 2005 William Allen White citation recipient

By Jay Senter, graduate student

To call Gerald Seib's career full would be gross understatement. The winner of the 2005 William Allen White Foundation's national citation, Seib has, at various points, covered Mexico City, Dallas, Washington and the Middle East for The Wall Street Journal, the paper for which he is currently Washington bureau chief. The experiences have brought Seib his share of praise (he received the Gerald R. Ford Foundation prize in 1990 for his reporting on the presidency) and predicament (he was accused of spying and held by the Iranian government while covering the Iran-Iraq war in 1987). During his visit to Lawrence to accept the William Allen White award in February, Seib, a Hays native, spoke with J-Links about the most challenging moments of his career, the state of the media, and his time at KU.

J-Links: You were held by the government in Iran in 1987 for several days before being released on your 31st birthday. When you got back, you said you had discovered that "Iran remains a risky place to do business." You knew it was risky when you went there to cover the Iran-Iraq war, but did you have any notion that as a journalist you were in any danger of being taken?

Gerald Seib: No, not at all. The dangerous place – the place we never went – at that time was Lebanon. There was a civil war under way and journalists were clearly being targeted.

Rachel Seymour, Kansan

Seib's citation acceptance speech, titled "Journalism: In Transition, or In Peril?," is available online at www.journalism.ku.edu.

Our philosophy, I think, was that you have to take some risks to do the job, but don't take any unreasonable risks. Going to Lebanon seemed like an unreasonable risk. Going to Iran did not seem like an unreasonable risk. The dangerous part of that trip seemed to be that we went to visit the Iran-Iraq warfront. Turns out that was wrong.

JL: As an editor now, as someone who sends correspondents into war, what goes through your mind when you hear about a journalist being kidnapped? And unfortunately a lot of times they aren't just being interrogated.

GS: It's frightening. When the war started, I sent five reporters from my bureau there to be embedded with the U.S. military. We at the Journal have done a lot of thinking, planning, rethinking and soul-searching about how you can safely send correspondents into Iraq. I encountered some danger [in Iran] in a sort of strange and quirky way. It's dangerous in Iraq every minute you are there right now as a journalist. And so what we have tried to do is restrict the number of people we send in, and put fairly clear limits on where they can go and what they can do, and we rethink the situation. We bought an armored car, for example. You can't send your people driving around the streets of Iraq, and do it in good conscience, unless they are in an armored car these days. It sounds absurd, but it is true.

JL: I want to talk a little bit about the current media environment. When you were here at KU in the late '70s, you focused on newspapers. Did you have any inkling that the industry would change so much, that you would be appearing on CNBC every day, or that your wife would be running a Web site?

Doug Koch, University Relations

Seib and his wife, Barbara Rosewicz, address a journalism class. Rosewicz is managing editor of Stateline.org, an online news site in Washington, D.C., that covers state policy and political trends.

GS: No, I had no idea. The big division in those days was between print and broadcast journalism. There was no new media. There was only old media. Nobody had any inkling what was going to happen. When you think back on my career, there was a lot of concern in the print world that newspapers and print journalism would be overtaken by broadcast, which never really happened actually. The Internet is what has really changed the way the industry looks, because it has created a whole different price structure. The problem is that no one has figured out the appropriate business model for making money on it. That's the real struggle right now. But I think you can't be afraid of change. You have to just deal with it. The way you deal with it, in my mind, is you tell yourself, "I'm not in the newspaper business. I'm not in the cable TV business. I'm in the news business."

JL: Is there anything from your time here at KU that you look back on and think, "That was extremely helpful"?

GS: There were two sort of legendary professors then, and they gave me the two things I think were most important. One was John Bremner, who taught editing. Basically, he taught love of, and intelligent use of, language. Nominally he taught editing, but he really taught use of the language. He gave you a set of skills that were the most important building block for journalism in whatever form. The other professor was Calder Pickett, who taught journalism history. But he really taught journalism history in a way that wasn't journalism history. It was more American history – world history, to a certain extent – as it should be seen by someone who wants to practice journalism. Calder Pickett taught you how to understand where everything fit. Those two guys really personified everything I learned at the University of Kansas. □

KUJH-TV Station Update

By Staci Wolfe, multimedia coordinator

At the heart of the KUJH-TV newsroom is the news desk, dubbed the amoeba table because of its uniquely flowing shape. The large table provides a central place for TV, radio and online producers to work together.

For students who have never experienced the noise and chaos of a real newsroom, it can be a bit overwhelming. After their first shift, however, most students walk away knowing they will learn a lot in the KUJH-TV newsroom.

The Stan and Madeline Stauffer Multimedia Newsroom in Dole is a new state-of-the-art facility that is also the new home of the KUJH-TV newsroom. The space provides KUJH-TV News with a "live from the newsroom" CNN-like studio, as well as a new computer-training lab.

Prof. Rick Musser's fall 2004 Online Writing, Editing and Production class spent much of the semester planning the new KUJH-TV News Web site. The online students researched and wrote a project plan, which included a map for the Web site's content and information on how and who would manage the site. Over winter break, students and staff members developed the new site, at <http://tv.ku.edu>, which was unveiled in January.

The Web site serves as an educational tool and a reflection of the J-School's convergence efforts. Online producers work closely with the TV news staff to explore new ways to present television news online.

"It's a big step in advancing our multimedia curriculum. It actually gives us a product that students can work on, as opposed to merely class exercises," said Dick Nelson, newsroom coordinator.

Amanda Kim Stairrett, Jetmore, Kan., junior, is The University Daily Kansan managing editor of news, sports and photography. As a part of the fall online class, Stairrett assembled an online style guide for KUJH-TV News.

Online Producer Meagan Kelleher updates the KUJH-TV News online bios for TV Producer Laci Wright and TV News Reporter Jaime Pedigo.

This guide provides online producers with writing and HTML coding styles for the new Web site.

"Adapting and adopting a style guide is necessary because it gives us more credibility when other professionals visit our site," Stairrett said.

In addition to the new Web site, KUJH-TV has recently added the Research Channel to its programming. The Research Channel is a consortium of research universities and corporations that broadcasts research presentations via cable, satellite and the Internet all over the world. For more information about programming, visit the Research Channel online at www.researchchannel.org.

KUJH-TV also is adding other programming, such as the speech by Gerald F. Seib, 2005 William Allen White citation recipient and The Wall Street Journal Washington bureau chief. The station is working with the Dole Institute of Politics to broadcast its upcoming events.

This spring, Dick Nelson was appointed as the new general manager for KUJH-TV. He will continue working with TV reporting students and directing the news, in addition to managing the television station's programming. Gary Hawke, former general manager, is retiring after 11 years of service to the J-School. □

Scholastic Press Association: Serving Kansas High Schools

Many of the world's great journalists started their careers toiling away late nights on their high school newspapers and yearbooks.

The Kansas Scholastic Press Association (KSPA) is dedicated to helping those students and their teachers achieve excellence in journalism education.

Housed in the School of Journalism, KSPA is a non-profit organization run by John Hudnall, KSPA executive director and lecturer in the J-School.

Two high school students competed in a writing contest at KU's regional contest Feb. 18.

"Scholastic journalism has been the start for most professionals," Hudnall said. "It becomes a proving ground of sorts."

The association's members, high school students and teachers, receive leadership and direction from KSPA through conferences, contests, critique services and newsletters. It is financed by conference, contest and membership fees. KSPA has 205 member schools.

To better aid its members, KSPA has five districts, with teachers elected as district representatives.

"The area representatives are liaisons," Hudnall said. "Some of the schools west of Topeka are far from the KSPA headquarters. The representatives are there to make sure those districts have access to KSPA resources."

As the executive director, Hudnall is in charge of publishing the Courier newsletter five times a year. The newsletter recognizes journalism students and educators for accomplishments through out the year. It contains articles on student press law and other issues of interest to students and teachers, tips to improve publications, lists of contest winners and entries, news from member schools and conference and contest announcements.

KSPA sponsors conferences at Fort Hays State University, Kansas State University and the University of Kansas every fall. During these events, members hear from top high school journalism teachers, college professors and area journalists.

The regional contests are held in Hays, Pittsburg, Manhattan, Wichita, Emporia and Lawrence. The regional contests at KU on Feb. 18 brought 578 students from 31 northeast Kansas high schools. State contests will be held at KU this May.

Prof. Tim Bengtson, lecturer Lisa Loewen and Kansan Sales and Marketing Advisor Jenny Weaver judged advertising at KU's regional contest Feb. 18.

For more information about KSPA services and membership fees, contact 785-864-0605 or visit KSPA online at www.ku.edu/~kspa. Photos in the top banner are from the contest Feb. 18. □

J-School Jayhawks peck at Big Apple

By Chris Crawford, senior

The School of Journalism sent a healthy contingent of magazine students to intern in and around New York City in January. Nine students completed two-week internships in the New York area as part of lecturer Kara Lynch's fall 2004 Fieldwork in Magazine Media course. I was one of them.

While in New York, and by invitation, students met with J-School alumnus John Suhler, managing partner of Veronis Suhler Stevenson; Dick Stolley, founding editor of People magazine; and Megan Hickerson, alumna and assistant to the publisher of Teen Vogue. All three offered perspectives on the publishing business, ranging from a recent grad paying her dues at the bottom, to successful veterans who can draw from decades of experience.

We interned at very different magazines. Some found themselves at well-known staples like Martha Stewart Living, Sports Illustrated, Shape magazine, and Good Housekeeping. Others gave their effort and energy to RES Magazine, The Knot, College Music Journal and "E" Environmental Magazine. I picked a slightly more obscure destination in Vice magazine.

Vice is a self-described "free monthly urban culture magazine." I chose Vice because I had never seen anything like it. The business model – a free glossy magazine with no subscriptions and distribution only to hip venues across the country – seemed revolutionary. Vice isn't for everyone; it contains racy pictures and editorial. But I think that might also be the reason for its success. Vice has expanded its distribution from New York, Los Angeles and Canada to England, Australia, Scandinavia and Japan. Vice Records continues to expand its roster of popular underground bands. And Vice has projects in the works for television and film as well.

Professionals Dick Stolley and Megan Hickerson joined magazine interns Mandy Hendrix, Lynn Hamilton, Anja Winikka and Peter Granitz for dinner.

As for my experience at Vice, all I can say is, it was cool. Every day at Vice was casual Friday. Everyone played loud music. Everyone yelled across the open warehouse space in Brooklyn. All of Vice's articles are freelanced by established writers, artists, musicians and comedians, so there was no chance I was going to write. But I did get the opportunity to edit text and design promotional material for the record department. I designed a couple of pieces that went out to retailers across the country with bands' CDs.

I realize that this type of environment is unusual in the publishing or business world and that I probably won't ever get a chance to experience it again. But I savored it during my two chilly weeks in the Big Apple. Some day I'll quietly sit down in my cubicle, in my freshly pressed shirt and tie, and reminisce about my internship in New York. Then I'll begin typing a groundbreaking story about the overseas concrete market. □

New faces in the classroom

By Lindsey Scott, senior

The J-School welcomed two new journalism lecturers, Eric Adler and Marilyn Rausch, to Stauffer-Flint Hall this spring. They both bring many interesting professional experiences to share with students.

Adler is teaching research and writing. He has been a reporter at The Kansas City Star for 20 years. He first reported science stories and now he writes feature and human-interest stories. He said he was happy to be at the J-School teaching future journalists.

Adler

"I like everything about working with them," he said. "They're eager. They're interested. They're kind. They all have amazing raw talent. My job is to help give it form, allow them to turn it loose in the right direction."

Rausch teaches the print and online design class. She is a former card designer for Hallmark and now owns a freelance design business. She also has a background in sales and marketing as a former account executive for Adobe Systems. She said she was excited to be at the J-School helping students learn to put visual content with their words.

Rausch

"I am helping students combine their words with design to create the visual voice. It helps engage the readers and keep them engaged in the piece," she said. □

ALUMNI NEWS & NOTES

War and the World Series: J-School alumna serves as versatile Associated Press photographer

By Lisa Schmitz, graduate student

Standing five-foot-two, Julie Jacobson is anything but diminutive when it comes to competing for a photo.

Jacobson, a 1992 J-School graduate, works as an Associated Press photographer based in New York City, where she rarely minces words and doesn't lack in creative stealth capabilities.

"This is such a physical job, and I'm surrounded by big guys and heavy equipment," Jacobson said. "I'm not afraid to say, 'If you mess with me one more time, I'll knock your teeth out.'"

Jacobson, 35, is primarily a sports photographer. She recently returned from covering Super Bowl XXXIX in Jacksonville, Fla. In the past, she has captured images at the Olympic Games in Athens, the U.S. Open golf and tennis tournaments and the World Series.

"At the Super Bowl this year, the sidelines were roped off to keep the photographers from rushing the field at the end of the game," Jacobson said.

One of Jacobson's photos from the 2004 Olympics

"But when they lifted the rope to let the cheerleaders through, I snuck in with them and made it onto the field."

Jacobson's pom-pom euphoria was short-lived, however: A large security guard quickly caught up with her and escorted her off the field.

"So close," she said, laughing.

Jacobson's scrappy nature also served her well in 2003 and 2004 when she worked as an embedded journalist during two tours of Iraq. The first tour began in Kuwait, where she prepped to embed with the Marines for the invasion. She then spent nine weeks in Iraq with the military. On her second tour, she entered through Jordan – an overnight stop – before going with hired drivers for a seven-week stay in Iraq.

Jacobson was asked to cover the war after she expressed an interest in doing so months earlier. She completed a U.S. Department of Defense training program with other embedded journalists in November 2002.

"They took us up in helicopters and tossed us around pretty good, and I got seasick on a ship in front of all these sailors," she said. "We were the first journalists to go through the training, and I heard they made it easier after us."

Jacobson's photographs from the war ran in both national and international publications, including The New York Times.

"The thing that struck me most during my time in Iraq was the people – they're just in a really bad fix," said Jacobson, who would like to return to the embattled country at some point.

Before joining the AP in New York in August 2003 – the city's infamous blackout happened during her first week on the job – Jacobson worked for the AP in San Francisco and for The Kansas City Star. She said her first job working on the Star's community pages remained her most valuable work experience because it taught her everything about the paper and how it all related.

Jacobson was born in Chicago and lived in Los Angeles and the Philippines before her family moved to Kansas City after her fifth-grade year. After graduating from high school and enrolling at the University of Kansas, she considered becoming a doctor like her dad and also toyed with a career in anthropology.

"Late in the spring of my sophomore year, I had enrolled in field work, and I was looking at National Geographic and photos of a site in Egypt," Jacobson said. "I had a (camera) I liked, and I thought, 'Hey, wait a minute – someone had to be there to take those pictures.'"

Soon after, Jacobson declared a major in journalism and never looked back. She went on to serve as photo editor at The University Daily Kansan for two years.

"Everything I learned at the J-School in my classes, I use every day," she said.

A collection of Jacobson's photos is currently on display in Stauffer-Flint. □

A Jayhawk among the Amazons

By Lindsey Scott, senior

Steve Frazier, 1977 grad and vice president of Amazon.com, has never been one to shy away from new technology.

During his time on The University Daily Kansan, he used the first computers in the newsroom. At The Wall Street Journal, he participated in the high-tech distribution system of a worldwide newspaper. He helped launch Payless ShoeSource Inc.'s first retail Web site, and now he develops new categories for one of the largest online retailers.

"I was always an early adopter of new technology, and at all my jobs I've been in the position of trying to figure out how technology could help me work better and accomplish more," Frazier said.

After reporting for The Wall Street Journal in the Dallas bureau, and spending three years as a foreign correspondent in Mexico and Central America, he decided it was time to prepare for another career.

"I covered the oil industry in the mid-1980s when it went through a giant downturn and got the idea that one needed to be prepared for several careers," Frazier said.

He decided a business degree would be the best preparation for his next career. He graduated with a master's degree in management from Northwestern University and joined a consulting firm. As a consultant, he worked with a few retail clients. This sparked an interest in the retail industry. In 1994, he returned to Kansas to work for Payless ShoeSource Inc. The experience of launching the company's Web site and his interest in online retailing directed him toward Amazon.com.

"It's a company really driven around innovation and using technology to create an experience for the customer that's never been created before. The way we use technology to do things is really an exciting environment," Frazier said.

Frazier has been with Amazon.com for five and a half years. He spent his first two years working outside London as the managing director of Amazon.co.uk. While there, he served as a media contact for interviews about the e-commerce boom in the United Kingdom. His background in journalism helped him.

"In the year 2000, I did 170 interviews. Certainly having the journalism experience helped me through. I had to do a lot of training to learn how to avoid Americanisms when I spoke to the British audience," Frazier said.

His journalism background has helped in other ways in his career and he has fond memories of his time at the J-School. He said that his background as a writer helped him on a daily basis and that lessons he learned in the classroom and newsroom were still with him at the Amazon.com office in Seattle.

"To this day, I quote John Bremner to people I work with all the time. It's not debatable. Bremner said it's true, so we're going to do it the way Bremner said," Frazier said.

Frazier credits both Susanne Shaw and Dana Leibengood for their help and guidance in his education and career. He said that they made the Journalism School feel like a second home. He also worked closely with Rick Musser, who was the Kansan general manager at the time, and former professor Paul Jess.

"Steve was a wonderful student and did very well at The Wall Street Journal. It was just a pleasure to have helped him," Leibengood said. □

Successful alumna draws from her KU roots

by Marissa Stephenson, senior

At times, Alison Gwinn asks herself, "How did I end up in New York?" Gwinn is a deputy editor there for InStyle magazine. She helps decide which writer fits with which star, she top-edits the magazine for errors and style, and she makes sure InStyle has clarity, consistency and continuity.

Gwinn, a 1977 J-School grad, answers her question by remembering where she started – the late nights working on The University Daily Kansan, the inspirational professors whose style and grammar guidance she still uses today, and the experience and know-how from the J-School that led her to four major newspapers and two top magazines.

Gwinn started out as a reporter at the Kansan, covering the administration beat and running back and forth between Stauffer-Flint and Strong Hall to interview the vice chancellor. She worked her way up to Kansan entertainment editor, copy chief and campus editor, closing the paper at 2 a.m. and joining her colleagues – "my best friends" – for breakfast at Denny's to wind the night down. With a job at the KU information center and a full class load, Gwinn's schedule then was more hectic than her daily routine today.

"Working at the Kansan consumed your life. It was tough and intense and I basically never slept, but I loved that job," Gwinn says. "It was sink or swim, and the people who were swimming were loving it."

Gwinn vividly remembers professors John Bremner, Susanne Shaw and Lee Young as the gems of her time at the University, providing her with the journalism savvy that would later prompt her husband (who worked on the Stanford paper and became a journalist himself) to say, "Man, you got a great education." Gwinn still uses

Prof. Bremner's grammar lessons and finds herself correcting her daughter Caitlin's teachers when it comes to matters like when to use "who" or "whom." She says the lessons were invaluable and a tremendous leg-up in the work-world; what she learned, she never had to relearn.

Recalling her college days, Gwinn described herself as "timid, meek, and shy." She readily admits that those were hard traits for a reporter. Susanne Shaw, however, remembers a different Alison Gwinn.

"I don't remember her being shy," Shaw says. "I remember a bright, passionate student who took courses to learn, not just to get an 'A.'"

After her graduation, Gwinn took a job as a copy editor at The Kansas City Times. She stayed in Kansas City for three years, and went on to work for the Chicago Tribune, the San Francisco Examiner, and the New York Times. While working at The Examiner, Gwinn met her future husband, Glenn Kramon, who is now an associate managing editor at The New York Times. At The Times, Gwinn worked on the metro and features desks. But when she got a call from Jeff Jarvis, a friend of her husband's at The Examiner, asking her to take a gamble on a start-up magazine, Entertainment Weekly, Gwinn took the chance, and threw herself into the new job. She says the staff practically killed themselves, working almost every night until after midnight to produce issues during the first year. The start-up wasn't "mainstream" enough (one early cover featured a book on Vietnam) and wasn't received well. With a re-focus on Hollywood stars, movies, TV and music, EW eventually found its niche, as did Gwinn, who climbed her way up the masthead to a top position.

After 10 years at Entertainment Weekly, Gwinn was ready for a change. When an EW colleague moved to InStyle, Gwinn followed, attracted to the new material, the steadier work pace the magazine offered and the opportunity to spend more time with her daughter.

Gwinn has worked at InStyle for five years, and says that while she's not a fashionista, she loves the job and the people. She may not be closing papers at 2 a.m. these days, but she does wake up at 5:20 each morning to go jogging with her husband and their dog, and she uses her free time for hiking, skiing, kayaking and travel.

Gwinn says hard work and a little luck got her to where she is today. And, she says, "I never forgot where I came from." □

Driven: Grad cruises in dream job at New York Times

By Jennifer Byrd, graduate student

For Jim Cobb, Kansas is never far from his heart.

"We have a Kansas Day barbecue every year on the news desk of The New York Times," said Cobb, a 1978 Journalism School graduate and the automobile editor at the Times.

Cobb said the prerequisites for attending the celebration, which evolved over the years from an exchange of e-mail greetings each Jan. 29 among Kansans on the Times staff, were pretty simple: "If you're from Kansas, married someone from Kansas, dated someone from Kansas, if you ever drove across Kansas or flew over Kansas, you're invited."

Cobb, who is from Jackson County near Holton, traveled back to his home state in February to watch friend and classmate Gerald Seib, the Washington bureau chief for The Wall Street Journal, receive the William Allen White citation. Cobb was managing editor of The University Daily Kansan when Seib was editor.

When he heard Seib would receive the award, Cobb said he knew he "absolutely" had to come back to Lawrence for the festivities.

"We had a really special group of people at that time," Cobb said. "There was just amazing energy in the J-School."

After graduating from KU, Cobb took a job as a copy editor on the news desk at the Detroit Free Press. He worked in a variety of positions at the paper, including copy chief for the business and feature sections. He ran the sports copy desk for three years and ended up as associate editor of the Free Press's Sunday Magazine before moving to the Times in 1986.

"He was an excellent copy editor, one of the best we've ever had," said Susanne Shaw, Cobb's adviser at KU. "He's a very bright guy."

While working on the Business Day copy desk at the Times, Cobb was tapped in 1994 to start a freestanding automobile section.

"My secret ambition since I was a kid was to work for a car magazine," Cobb said.

One of the challenges in starting the section was to make sure editorial content would not be influenced by advertisers and would be done in the "Times Way" with the newspaper's ethical standards in place.

"All too often there are very cozy relationships between people who are covered and people who are covering," Cobb said. "We wanted to avoid the pitfalls."

Doug Koch, University Relations

Doug Koch, University Relations

Cobb said the Times always pays manufacturers a rental fee for cars that it tests, something that was not being done at that time and is still not mainstream. Cobb now oversees the Sunday auto section and the Monday auto page. He also provides content to the newspaper's Web site.

"The Web, I'm finding, is an insatiable beast: It wants to be fed constantly," Cobb said.

Most of his writers are freelancers with whom he has worked for years. One of those former freelancers, Dan Neil of the Los Angeles Times, won the Pulitzer Prize for criticism in 2004.

Cobb's main piece of advice to future journalists is to be flexible.

"You never know quite where life will lead you," he said, adding that when he left KU he never thought he would eventually work for The New York Times or fulfill his childhood dream of testing cars and directing coverage of the auto industry. □

ROLL OF HONOR

KU FIRST: INVEST IN EXCELLENCE

Donors to the William Allen White School of Journalism and Mass Communications, 1998 – 2004

CONGRATULATIONS! YOU DID IT! YOU EXCEEDED ALL EXPECTATIONS!

During the KU First: Invest in Excellence campaign, the School of Journalism and Mass Communications set a goal of $5 million. Thanks to the generosity and faith of hundreds of friends and supporters, the School met that goal and went on to raise a total of more than $6 million. You did it!

This publication is our humble way of saying, "Thank you."

The list of names includes all donors whose gifts were made during the KU First campaign to the KU Endowment Association benefiting the School of Journalism and Mass Communications. The campaign began July 1, 1998, and it concluded December 31, 2004. Donors are grouped according to their total donations during that period.

This Roll of Honor contains stories about a few gifts — some larger, some smaller — to illustrate a few of the many reasons and ways that our alumni and friends have found to support the School. Every gift is important and deeply appreciated.

The KU First campaign may be over, but you still can put "KU Journalism First." See the back cover for information on how to contact the KU Endowment Association about giving options.

— Ann M. Brill, Dean

Front cover, from top: Eric Weslander, News and Information '99, shares his experiences with a reporting class; a student edits video using equipment provided by a donation; students work in the Stan and Madeline Stauffer Multimedia Newsroom (see p. 9); Peggy Kuhr, who in 2002 became Knight Chair in Community Journalism, a position supported by a grant from the John S. and James L. Knight Foundation; and students celebrate the end of one long road and the beginning of another.

Giving for the long term — The Roger N. Wooldridge Memorial Scholarships have helped our students since 1974. Above, this year's Wooldridge Scholars: Andrew Vaupel, Kyle Cook, Matt Rodriguez (with daughter Isabella), Cynthia Hernandez, Shanxi Upsdell and Amanda O'Toole. Mr. and Mrs. Norris Wooldridge, Hutchinson, established the scholarship in memory of their son Roger, who was a junior in the School when he died. Norris Wooldridge died in July 1999.

THANKS TO THE CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE

The School's success in the KU First campaign is largely due to the efforts of the Journalism Campaign Committee. These eight individuals gave financial gifts as well as their commitment to raise money for the School. They worked closely with KU Endowment and with deans Jimmy Gentry and Ann Brill. Campaign Committee members were:

Malcolm W. Applegate, committee chair (Journalism '59, former president and general manager, The Indianapolis Star); Danforth W. Austin (Journalism '68, chairman and CEO, Ottaway Newspapers, Inc.); Richard C. Clarkson (Journalism '55, owner, Rich Clarkson and Associates, Denver); Ralph D. Gage, Jr. (Journalism '64, chief operating officer, The World Company); Larry Kanter (Communications '74, MBA '83, news anchor, 1010 WINS Radio, New York); Dana A. Leibengood (Journalism '55, MS Journalism '69, retired Journalism School administrator); Shelly J. London (Journalism '74, MBA '81, vice president-communications, American Standard Companies); and Terry K. Shockley (MS Journalism '66, president, Shockley Group).

Clarkson gives all to alma mater

Rich Clarkson, Denver photojournalist, has arranged a bequest through which virtually his entire estate will come to the University. His photography collection, including prints by Ansel Adams, is destined for the Spencer Museum of Art, and the remainder will benefit the School. Values are undetermined, but the gifts substantially helped the School reach its $6 million KU First goal.

Rich Clarkson

As a journalism student at KU, Clarkson, news/editorial '55, honed skills and savvy that made him one of the pre-eminent photojournalists of recent decades. He has been director of photography and senior assistant editor of the National Geographic Society, assistant managing editor of The Denver Post and a contract and contributing photographer to Sports Illustrated. In 1987, he founded Rich Clarkson and Associates, Denver. The company creates books, exhibitions and interactive multimedia based on fine photography. Clients include the Denver Broncos, the Colorado Rockies and the NCAA.

Although he has not designated specific purposes for the gift, Clarkson said he hoped the School would be able to re-establish emphasis on photojournalism and visual communication.

"I've been involved with the university my entire life," he said. "When this fund-raising campaign came along, it just seemed the time to do it."

A gift that truly keeps on giving

Barkley Evergreen & Partners Inc. made a $25,000 gift in 2001 to establish the Bill Fromm Scholarship for students in the School. Fromm founded the firm in 1964; a few years ago, employees bought it from him.

They wanted to give Fromm a unique gift and decided giving to KU was a terrific way to honor him because the company's staff includes many KU fans and alumni. The scholarship is awarded annually to an academically qualified junior or senior in Strategic Communications.

Courtney Grams, Minden, Neb., senior, holds the Fromm Scholarship this year. She said it had been extremely helpful, especially since one of her three younger brothers started college this fall.

"I also studied abroad this summer in Italy," she said. "I was questioning whether or not I was going to be able to afford it, and the scholarship made that possible."

Barkley Evergreen & Partners is a full-line advertising and marketing company whose client list includes Citgo Petroleum, Payless ShoeSource, Sears Portrait Studios and the Kansas and Missouri lotteries. The firm is a major employer of the School's interns and graduates.

Multimedia: dream to reality

In late 2002, Stanley H. Stauffer, journalism '42, and his wife, Madeline A. Stauffer, of Topeka, pledged $200,000 to help construct and equip a new kind of newsroom. It was an audacious dream. Almost two years later, the Stan and Madeline Stauffer Multimedia Newsroom became a gleaming, buzzing reality.

Ethernet and power connections sprout from the floor. Nine glass windows in the room's longest interior wall allow passers-by to see activity around the clustered Web production computers, high-definition video monitors, news desks and video broadcasting equipment.

In this state-of-the-art newsroom in the Dole Center, journalism students apply traditional skills in a new environment. They gain real-world experience by producing news, features and in-depth reports — for television, radio, online and print — all in one newsroom. It's a major step in building a curriculum that prepares students for the media future.

"Traditional media will continue to hire KU students," Professor Rick Musser, multimedia newsroom director, said. "But now, multimedia companies nationwide will come looking for students at KU."

Stan Stauffer is a William Allen White Foundation trustee and the retired chairman and president of Stauffer Communications. The company, which was sold in 1994, owned a variety of media outlets, including the Topeka Capital-Journal. Stan's father, Oscar, founded the company and is a namesake of the School's main building, Stauffer-Flint Hall.

Kris Baxter works a Web story as a news broadcast sets up behind.

Internships and added value

If anyone knows the value of internships to students, it might be someone who has coached and advised literally hundreds of students.

Susanne M. Shaw, professor of journalism, has established a trust that will ultimately give $100,000 to the School. This gift will establish the Susanne Shaw Award

Susanne Shaw

Fund to provide awards to journalism students selected to be interns at the Lawrence Journal-World.

The fund will pay interns' salaries so that the newspaper will not have to. The award is restricted to juniors or seniors who plan to be copy editors or newspaper reporters.

"The people at the Journal-World are very interested in helping students get better," Shaw said. "Many times, students learn more about the news business in small settings — and the Journal-World, for its size, is an excellent paper."

Shaw, education '61 and master's in journalism '67, has taught journalism at KU since 1971. She teaches one course each semester and serves as academic adviser for journalism students and a trustee of the William Allen White Foundation. She also is executive director of the Accrediting Council on Education in Journalism and Mass Communications, the organization that evaluates and accredits journalism and mass communications programs at U.S. universities and colleges.

Money and mentors: the personal touch

The Multicultural Journalism Scholars Program offers more than money: personalized advising, tutoring, social and cultural events, and, perhaps most important, a sympathetic mentor who can help in dealing with university life.

Douglas L. and Audrey Tanaka Miller, of Weybridge, England, gave $55,000 to establish the program, launched in fall 2001. Since then, 22 scholars have benefited; five have graduated, and 14 are participating this year. Estuardo Garcia, Lenexa senior in News and Information, is one of them.

"The Multicultural Scholars program means a lot to me," Garcia said, "and I know it means a lot to the other students in the program who may not otherwise be able to afford a higher education. Having personally spent some time with Mr. and Mrs. Miller this summer, receiving the scholarship comes with an extra sense of gratitude for the kindness and generosity they have shown."

The journalism program is modeled after one in the KU School of Business. It has been coordinated by professors Adrienne Rivers and Charles Marsh; lecturer Christy Bradford took over in fall 2004.

Bradford said the scholars are selected early and typically stay with the program all four years.

"They must have, and must maintain, high GPAs," Bradford said. "These students are not academically challenged; they're mostly isolated. We try to help them negotiate the campus and not feel so alone."

The program's benefits flow both ways, former coordinator Marsh said.

"This honestly has changed the way I teach," he said. "It's deeply rewarding, the best thing I've done in 15 years here."

Doug Miller, economics and international relations '66 and MBA '71, worked for Continental Bank of Chicago until 1990, when he founded International Private Equity Ltd., a company that raises venture capital funds.

The journalism program continues the Millers' longtime interest in helping minority students, beginning in 1985 with a fund that provides scholarships for students of color pursuing master's degrees in business administration.

Honor the masters' voices

Terry and Sandy Shockley and their children, Toni Peterson and Todd Shockley, committed $250,000 for the School in 2003. The gift honored two KU journalism professors and created a fund to provide unrestricted support for radio, television and film studies in the school.

The Bruce Linton Graduate Scholarship in Electronic Media supports graduate students with a preference for those studying electronic media. It honors Prof. Emeritus Bruce Linton, who headed broadcast education at the School from 1955 to 1984 and taught at KU 33 years.

The Tom Hedrick Scholarship goes to journalism students with a preference for those studying radio-television sportscasting. Retired Prof. Hedrick taught radio and television performance at KU and was the longtime radio voice of the Jayhawks and the Kansas City Chiefs.

Terry, radio-television-film '66, is president of the Shockley Group, Inc., Madison, Wis. Sandy is vice president of the consulting and training firm. In 2001, the couple sold Shockley Communications Corporation, a media company that included television and radio stations and video production facilities. Toni Peterson, journalism '89, is president and owner of Administrative Answers, a search firm in Minneapolis, Minn., and Todd Shockley, liberal arts '93, is an account manager for FOX-owned and -operated television stations in Chicago.

Applegate's gift establishes professorship

Continued excellence in editing at the School is the goal of a $500,000 fund to be established by Malcolm W. Applegate, journalism '59. Through his estate plans, Applegate, an Indianapolis alumnus and former assistant dean of journalism, has committed two gifts of $250,000 each to create the Malcolm W. Applegate Distinguished Professorship in Editing Fund. The Applegate Distinguished Professor will teach newspaper editing and encourage students to pursue careers in the field.

Malcolm Applegate

Applegate said KU's journalism school has long been known for the quality of its editing professors, especially Clyde M. Reed Distinguished Professor Emeritus Calder Pickett and the late John Bremner, Oscar S. Stauffer Distinguished Professor of Journalism.

"Since the days of Calder Pickett and John Bremner, KU has always ranked among the very best in teaching editing," Applegate said. "I hope this professorship, with its primary focus on newspapers and other print media, will help carry on that tradition and encourage students to pursue editing careers."

Applegate, a WaKeeney native, also earned a master's degree from the University of Iowa. He is the retired president and general manager of the Indianapolis Star. He worked as an editor and publisher at four Gannett Co., Inc., newspapers for 20 years and served as assistant dean at KU's journalism school from 1965 until 1969. He is a trustee of the William Allen White Foundation and was chair of the Journalism Campaign Committee for KU First.

$250,000 bequest honors Kansas editor

Kansas newspaperman Whitley Austin once suggested that the School of Journalism at KU be abolished. Now, his family has established a KU journalism fellowship to honor his career. Whitley's son, Dan, journalism '68, his widow, Mary Frances Austin, and daughter, Cathy Austin Roberts, bequeathed $250,000 in 2003 to establish the Whitley and Mary Frances Austin Graduate Fellowship.

As a member of the Kansas Board of Regents, Whitley argued that academic specialties should be concentrated at one institution in the state to more efficiently use higher education funds. He abandoned his crusade to have journalism courses concentrated at Kansas State University soon after Dan decided to major in journalism at KU.

"We gave the gift to the KU journalism school as a way of honoring my dad's contributions to the profession and both of my parents' life-long interest in Kansas educational institutions," Dan said. "I think Dad would have gotten a chuckle out of having a KU journalism fellowship named in his honor, but I also think that he would have felt honored."

After graduating from the University of Wisconsin in 1931, Whitley returned to his hometown of Emporia as a cub reporter for William Allen White's Emporia Gazette. He later worked for the Hutchinson News. In 1949, he joined the Salina Journal as editor and publisher, a job he held until his retirement. He wrote memorable, sometimes controversial, editorials.

"These editorials were frequently picked up by other Kansas newspapers and, through their force and clarity, made him known throughout the state – not always favorably," Dan said. "For instance, he was one of the first Kansas editors to come out against the Vietnam War, arguing that it was 'the wrong war in the wrong place at the wrong time.'"

Whitley won the William Allen White Foundation Citation, was a chairman of the Board of Regents and was a Pulitzer Prize juror. He died in 1995. Now retired, Mary Frances lives in Salina. Dan, Short Hills, N.J., is the vice chairman of Ottaway Newspapers Inc., a subsidiary of Dow Jones & Company. Previously, he served as a vice president of The Wall Street Journal. Cathy, a graduate of Kansas State, is a first grade teacher in Flagstaff, Ariz.

A special thanks to Allen Press

Allen Press, Lawrence, supported the School throughout the KU First campaign through significant discounts on services and through in-kind donations of materials. Without this continuing support, improvements in the School's publications would have been much more modest and slower in coming.

The School deeply appreciates the contributions by Allen Press and its employees to our success.

For information about ways of giving, corporate matching arrangements or any of the many ways you can benefit the William Allen White School of Journalism and Mass Communications at the University of Kansas, please contact Patrick Mikesic at the KU Endowment Association at (785)832-7461 • (800)444-4201 ext. 461 • pmikesic@kuendowment.org

Gifts should be made payable to the KU Endowment Association and sent to:

KU ENDOWMENT ASSOCIATION
P.O. BOX 928
LAWRENCE, KS 66044-0928

The KU Endowment Association is the independent, non-profit organization that serves as the official fund-raising and fund-management foundation for the University. Fund-raising costs for the School of Journalism are supported, in large part, by the Endowment Association. This support ensures that 100 percent of all gifts are used for the School.

• • • • •

This list of donor names is strictly for the purpose of acknowledgment by the School of Journalism. Any other use is unauthorized. The list includes names of donors whose gifts were received at the KU Endowment Association during the entire period of the campaign KU First: Invest in Excellence, from July 1, 1998 to Dec. 31, 2004.

The Roll of Honor was supported by the Ward Family Foundation Fund and produced by the William Allen White School of Journalism and Mass Communications in conjunction with the KU Endowment Association.

Editor: Charles Higginson

Development Directors: John Pepperdine, Jack Schwartz, James Mechler, Patrick Mikesic
Writers: KU Endowment Association Communications Department; Tamara Dugard; Charles Higginson
